Hi (James)

Just read your article in the Daily Telegraph.

I've recently been doing some strategy work with the Royal Mint - a state-owned organisation at the 'bleeding edge' of de-cashing economies around the world.

Their input (along with banknote producers) might prove helpful in your work.

One other consideration....

HM Treasury, like most around the world fighting crime, corruption and the darker sides of most economies, are increasingly enamoured by the idea of transaction 'oversight' afforded by non-cash payment systems.

Kind regds

Sent from Mike Simpson's iPhone